Derivation of "Charivari."

It is stated that this word is found in French in the fourteenth century, and reference is made to Littré. I have no means of referring to Littré, but desire to indicate the use of the words "chery feire" by Gower. I give the complete sentences from the prologue to the "Confessio Amantis":

For if mon loke in holy chirehe
Betwene the worde and that they wirche.
There is a ful great difference.
They prechen us in anounces.
That mon shall his soule emperce.
For al is but a chery feire.
This wordes good, so as they telle.
Also they sayn there is an helle.
Whiche into mannes sinne is doun.
And hidden us therefore escheue
That wiked is, and do the good.

The late Professor Henry Morley, in the "Charivari" edition of the "Confessio Amantis" (1889, page 39), simply gives "charivari" as the equivalent of "chery feire." Is this the form in which the expression occurs in early French? If so, it would seem that this puzzling word should yield its secret to persistent investigation on the part of French scholars, though there are two words to trace instead of one.—Notes and Queries.

This Skinned Question.

It has often been questioned why orange growers will graft and plant varieties with thick skins when the great public appreciates a thin skinned one more highly. Asking a grower, if not one of the secret of the orange growing trade, why this was thus, he replied that the thin skinned kinds were rarely as productive as the thick skinned ones—that the public would give no more for a box of thin skins than for a box of thick ones—and as there was consequently more profit in growing orange skins than in growing orange flesh the skins carried the day.

We have never heard such an explanation before, and this may be only "chaff." Still, the great question remains, Why do orange growers graft and plant thick skinned sorts when the thin skins are preferable?—Meehan's Monthly.

SPAIN HAS AGREED TO CONSIDER OUR DEMAND.

A Clause in the Treaty of 1795 and the Cushing Protocol of 1877 Apply to the Cases—A Strong Fight is Going to be Made.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—In the Comptroller case it can be authoritatively stated that at the request of the United States the Spanish government will postpone execution of the death sentences upon American citizens until the views of the United States respecting the application to their cases of the treaty of 1795 and the Cushing Protocol of 1877 can be presented and considered.

The announcement of the postponement of the execution means a delay of some weeks at least, and that the matter will be taken up by the diplomatic representatives of the United States of Spain, and be made the subject of the exchange of correspondence on the interpretation to be given the treaty provisions between the two nations. Meanwhile the effect will be to allay popular excitement both here and in Spain.

The action of the state department in insisting upon a retrial at least of the American prisoners is evidently in answer to the contention of the court-martial that the Cushing Protocol of 1877 did not apply to the present case. The court held that it applied only to American citizens resident in Spain or the Spanish dominions, and as the captives from the Commodore were not any sense residents of Cuba, decided that they could not claim any of the privileges accorded by the protocol.

In the opinion of the state department this was an extremely narrow and liberal construction to place upon the protocol, but while not accepting this construction the department guarded against an adverse decision on the protocol by recurring to the ancient treaty of 1795, on the ground that if the prisoners' case was not covered by the protocol they certainly could not invoke the measure of protection afforded by the earlier treaty. While this treaty is not by any means generous in the matter of privileges held out to American prisoners, it still contains some guarantees of great value to them in just such cases as that which has now arisen. The section of the treaty applying to the case, in the judgment of the state department, is article VII, which reads as follows:

And it is agreed that the subjects and citizens of each of the contracting parties, their vessels or effects, shall not be liable to any embargo or detention on the part of the other, for any military expedition or public or private purpose whatever, and in all cases of seizure, detention or arrest for debts contracted, or offenses committed by any citizen of the one party within the jurisdiction of the other, the same shall be made and prosecuted by order and authority of law only, and according to the regular course of proceedings usual in such cases. The citizens and subjects of both parties shall be allowed to employ such advocates, solicitors and notaries, agents and factors, as they may judge proper in all their affairs and in all their trials at law, in which they may be concerned before the tribunals of the other party, and such agents shall have free access to be present at the proceedings in such cases, and at the taking of all the examinations of evidence which may be exhibited in the said trials.

The contention of the state department is, that irrespective of the Cushing Protocol of 1877, this treaty gives the American prisoners certain privileges that were withheld from them by the Spanish court-martial. Notably, they were obliged to make their defense in the hands of a Spanish officer detailed for the purpose, and one in all probability not particularly anxious to clear his clients, and were prevented from selecting their own counsel as guaranteed by the treaty. Also, it is said that the prisoners were not accorded an opportunity to procure testimony in their own behalf. This is one of the privileges inseparable from a lawful and regular conduct of the prosecution.

Altogether the indications are that the state department is preparing to make a strong legal defense against the execution of the death penalty in the case of the American prisoners.
